

The [Mega Church] – IRS Worthship Ministries

[It's a church being organized on corporal & corporate logic seen as a collective experience of religious phenomenon]

A Mega-Church is a term used (primarily in the United States) to describe large Protestant Christian congregations in the United States of which there are roughly 1600 presently. A common criticism of mega-churches is that they draw members away from other churches. This has led to the use of the derisive term, "big box churches". The more popular and powerful they become, the more they are derided as commercial, narcissistic and corporate. In order to understand fully the dynamics of mega-churches, they must be seen as a collective experience of religious phenomenon; rather than as individual anomalous moments of spectacular profane growth, worship or uniquely successful spiritual entrepreneurial ventures.

Defendants' Mega Church thru IRS Worthship Ministries accommodates Twenty-First Century Religion with its vision in serving this new millennium. It's a church being organized on corporal & corporate logic. What the IRS has is the Ten Commandments-lite, less filling, tastes great version of a Worthship service. Plaintiff knows THE IRS is discipleship-lite (taxpayers) but has many taxprayers. The IRS Worthship Ministries is not really demanding anything of a taxpayer; other than making a proper return to an IRS path of life, religious beliefs and devout practices. This Mega Church comprised the surreal complexities of a religious bureaucracy creating diverse worship ministries that provide various forms of salvation, redemption & hope found in tax refunds- exemptions- exclusions- credits- deductions- adjustments- abatements
